

PICTURE THIS

To my obviously limited knowledge and/or ability to structurally conceive, I will dive into the investigation, hopefully revelation of how our senses conjure 'live' pictures and actions in our brain. To my limited knowledge no one has ever even attempted to provide an hypothesis of how such a thing occurs. Within our operating system, and when I use 'our' I include all sentient beings, there is a system that aggregates every sensation, perception, action et al that one is capable of translating experiencing into a coherent active picture, an interactive picture of everything that is experienced. Although mental and physical enterprise will be unable to formulate a method by which such a concept is 'picturable', it is inconceivable. Accepting this premise as possible within our current mental and physical natures one must think in an imaginative e.mial Clif Highmanner outside of the natural limits of reasoning. Thinking springs to a computer analogy of 0's and 1's arranged from a vibratory genesis technologically successfully developed; converting and displaying pictorial and active data as in a live context from such base informational generation. That is infinite arrangements of 0's and 1's can produce a facsimile of 'reality' - if one can define and accept 'reality'. Machines convert active and static reality into digits, store the digits, replicate them, transmit and display them through other machines such that reality is duplicated remotely. This is magic in every way and may be a core element in proposing a natural system that illuminates the mechanical spiritually within our life systems.

The hypothesis is that 'reality' is composed, comprised and is indeed 'only' vibratory signals generated from The One Source that are configured to present a representation of 'reality'. A reality that is not static but a constant flowing activity representing all that is known or could be known. 'Life' is a constant flickering on/off ultimately being formed and reformed at a prospective 22 trillion times per second - which frequency is beyond physical comprehension and only imaginable. Our brain apparently is similar in that it is composed of neurons and cranial nerves that are constantly 'firing' and exchanging 'digital' information, storing and replicating information quite close to the original. The brain is the central processor, the function-maker, the 'king' man of life: all forms of life from Amoeba to humanity, through all inherent elements. Is it obvious that a mechanism of communication is at the heart of creation (inert and living), and that all, what we call matter, is just being held within a vibratory field at incredible levels, subject to alternation as determined - required? Varying levels of frequency determine the level of 'intelligence' from low vibrational entities, such as inert boulders and soil, to intermittent entities such as plants and cellular life to the current highest vibratory, animals of all types. The vibratory theory potentially explains the active processes however it is necessary to provide a theory for the storage of memory and feelings to join the circle: if the analogy of the CPU as the operating system and the RAM as the initial and current memory system incorporating part A and part B a bit more challenging. Vibration, by definition is an active force, memory appears to be static - vibration held in abeyance until reactivated. The prospects of an 'on world' solution to this paradox is bleak, we likely will need to go off-world. Few are pleased to enter this path as the journey is unmarked, misty and the destination untold. Nevertheless we're dealing with mystery within mystery and adventure and courage is required. Those who accept that there is a world or worlds beyond are own will be prepared to accept the potential that off-world such a storage medium is active. In eastern spiritual traditions that 'place', that function is held by the Akashic Records; the embodiment of events, emotions, hopes from all time from/for all entities. By conjecture we can speculate that the communication characteristics of the vibratory system is capable of transmitting data, all data, to this remote facility - Akashic Records. Apparently the records are open sourced and universally available upon command by the 'in-putter', there is some thought that records are retrievable by 'others' under special circumstances. As well the meme that upon death one has to review all past actions could well indicate the existence of such a stronghold.

Does this vibratory hypothesis preclude 'free-will'; controlled by the vibratory initiator that determines outcomes? To my 'mind' the vibratory field is the foundation facilitating experience which is the object of The Source, experience unique to every created entity that expands the nature of The Creator, The Source.

The 'dumb' example of a TV, alluded to earlier, can be envisioned to illustrate this phenomenon - creating, manipulating, transmitting and replication of digital inputs from a source to a 'display' is a rudimentary 'explanation' of a potential spiritual process. I say spiritual as the operation is the premise of a 'Grande Operational Plan of the One Source'. Any appeal to 'evolution or natural selection' as a potential developer is ludicrous. All phenomenon in this iteration of creation is purposeful and certainly not random, premised on a structure and mechanism that promotes the objective which is 'experience'; activating a Gestalt inherent in the plan.

That concludes this walk onto The Twilight Zone; my hope is that it has provoked some OOB thinking and moved your open imagination to new flights.